The Blockhouse, which was loopholed, was the key of the enemy's position. Seeing no Officer of the storming party near, and being anxious that the place should be taken immediately, as any protracted resistance might have caused the main body of the Bhootas to rally, the British Force having been fighting in a broiling sun on very steep and difficult ground for upwards of three hours, the General in command ordered these two Officers (Captain Trevor, and Lieut. J. Dundas, R. Engineers (since dead)) to show the way into the Blockhouse. They had to climb up a wall which was fourteen feet high, and then to enter a house, occupied by some 200 desperate men, head foremost through an opening not more than two feet wide between the top of the wall and the roof of the Blockhouse. Major General Tombs states that on speaking to the Sikh soldiers around him, and telling them in Hindoostani to swarm up the wall, none of them responded to the call until these two Officers had shown them the way, when they followed with the greatest alacrity.
